The Supreme Court in retreat

Illustration by Ruth Johnson

The United States Supreme Court completed its most recent term in June. The Court, dominated by Nixon appointees, handed down a number of decisions that have disturbed civil libertarians and other court observers. The Court's critics contend the recent decisions run contrary to and often appear to ignore earlier decisions in the areas of civil liberty and equal protection under law.

In a two-part series that will be concluded in next week's issue, Osceola contributor Herb Buhl examines some of the more important and, to his mind, disturbing decisions handed down during the recent term-decisions which, as Buhl notes, "touch the lives of virtually every American."

Herb Buhl is staff attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union in South Carolina.

by Herb Buhl

Almost every day for the last three weeks of their 1976-1977 term, the nine Justices of the U.S. Supreme Court entered the courtroom before a packed audience of spectators and attorneys and, grim-faced, announced their decisions significantly changing the law of the land.

The death penalty forbidden in rape cases. Attorneys permitted to advertise. Mandatory death sentences for murder of law enforcement officials struck down. States allowed to decide whether to pay for non-therapeutic abortions for needy women. Severe paddling of school students not cruel and unusual punishment.

There was a time when keeping up with the opinions of the Supreme Court was relegated to law professors, attorneys, and a few court watchers. All of that has changed. The U.S. Supreme Court in the last decade has written decisions touching the lives of virtually every American.

The Supreme Court docket has steadily increased over the years and this has been of increasing concern to the Justices. While the number of cases brought before the Court from 1931 to 1951 reflected only a small increase, from 1951 to 1971 the load increased three-fold. In 1971, 3651 cases were filed, and by the 1976-1977 term, that figure had increased to 4730.

The Court, of course, does not render a decision in each case filed. During the 1975-76 term of court, 179 cases were actually argued before the Justices, who rendered 160 signed opinions and 16 decisions without written opinion (per curiam). In 1976-77, the number of written opinions increased slightly to 176.

The Court has taked some steps to alleviate the problem of a crowded docket — by granting additional law clerks to each Justice, by eliminating the archaic practice of requiring attorneys to personally appear before the Court to be admitted to the Supreme Court bar, by reducing oral argument in almost all cases to 30 minutes, and by announcing its opinions in brief summaries rather that the usual full textual reading.

In an effort to cut down on the increasing work load of the Court, Chief Justice Warren Burger in 1971 proposed the establishment of a National Court of Appeals which would screen out and finally dispose of nearly 90 percent of the petitions now filed with the U.S. Supreme Court.

> "...The easiest way to cut back on the docket is to narrow the definition and scope of constitutionally protected rights. At this the Court has become ingenious. In fact, the Court has exhibited an almost callous and cavalier disregard for human rights and individual liberties..."

Within the past five years, several blue ribbon panels representing both bench and bar have recommended the creation of some kind of new National Court of Appeals. Legislation is now pending in Congress which would implement some of these proposals. Such proposals however, have been met with divided reactions by both judges and attorneys.

Obviously the establishment of a National Court of Appeals would cut down on the overcrowded Supreme Court docket and reduce the workload substantially, but critics argue a Court of Appeals would also severely restrict an individual's access to the Highest Court of the Land.

Immediately following Burger's proposal, former Chief Justice Earl Warren said the proposed Court would substantially alter the prestige and power of the Supreme Court and would cause irreparable damage. Warren pointed out that "if the doors of the Court were to be shut to fully 90 percent of the citizens' complaints, and if the Complainents were forced to accept the final judgement (of a National Court of Appeals), its public stature as the...'citadel of justice' would soon begin to fade."

To so restrict access to the Supreme Court could have far reaching consequences. As former Justice Goldberg has pointed out: "It is perhaps the greatest virtue of the Supreme Court as it now functions that it serves as a guarantee to all citizens of whatever estate, race or color, that our highest court is open for consideration of their claim that equal and relevant justice under the Constitution is being denied them."

Many observers are legitimately concerned that the Supreme Court would lose control over its docket and thus no longer be able to establish national priorities, or examine and find new approaches to areas of the law now considered settled. A Supreme Court insulated from the people could hardly be considered the Highest Court in the Land and might end up, as some observers suggest, as the Court of Some Resort instead of the Court of Last Resort.

Of course, there can be no doubt that under the guidance of Chief Justice Burger the Court had decided to hear fewer cases. The Court has devised several means to achieve this end. In a series of rulings the Court has made access to federal courts much more difficult. the Court has narrowly construed the law of standing and by expanding the technical requirements of the law governing exhaustion,

Ravenel Realpolitik

The juices of Pug Ravenel's political sex appeal are flowing again, in the wake of the announcement that he'll run against Storm Thunder, South Carolina's own senior senator, (senile senator). The announcement last Monday set the state's political mills agrinding and the state's media rushed to receive Ravenel's cool ministrations upon the body politic.

Having been in Northern climes when he ran for governor in '74, I see Ravenel from an outsider's viewpoint. What I see is the faint, definable but undefined aura of political Gestalt. Ravenel is South Carolina's meek analogue to Ted Kennedy perhaps, with the Harvard education and the respectable Charleston ties for pedigree, and with his reportedly churlish behavior when the State Supreme Court ousted him as his Chappaquiddick. The analogy could be made as well with a Pat Moynihan or a Jerry Brown, en fin with any of those politicians who've brought off the impression that they were men of superior calibre, men of insight and Vision, men ready to right wrongs, men chafing to bring progress, kicking and screaming if need be, to their bailiwicks.

It recalls the '60s, the Children's Crusades, the marches on Washington, the...I have to smile at the images which appear. What silliness it was! My fondest "political" feat was to have sat on the White House lawn smoking a joint during the '69 anti-Vietnam march. We were fools to think Liberal White Knights would redress the dimly perceived, often self-indulgent grievances of a generation that hadn't done its homework and didn't care to face dull realities. But our instincts were good, and that leads back again to Ravenel. His instincts are good, even if he's full of bullshit.

I'm going to come down hard on Ravenel because I expect more from him. Not because he's from Harvard. (I have no illusions about the school.) But because he's pretended to offer more. Ravenel is called a "progressive" and calls himself such. But a progressive what? There are progressive Democrats, but there are progressive Nazis too, no doubt. He wants a "progressive type of government," but that means nothing. It descends to mere doublethink when one ponders his claim that the "progressive" platform he campaigned for in 1974 has now been enacted (by Gov. Edwards?) and therefore he need not run for governor. If that's progressiveness...oh what the hell, as well expect "progressive" politics in South Carolina as expect the moon to melt.

"...(Ravenel) wants a 'progressive type of government,' but that means nothing. It descends to mere doublethink when one ponders his claim that the 'progressive' platform he campaigned for in 1974 has now been enacted (by Gov. Edwards?) and therefore he need not run for governor..."

No, it's clear that Ravenel's strategy is to ride on the ghost of his charisma and, when it comes down to issues, play the carbon copy of Carter (access to the Peanut Man will be a major selling point, even if such access is now more mythical than real). For a fine example, look to 14B: Ravenel opposes repeal of the law (which outlaws closed union shops, but which has become a metaphor of anti-unionism). But he says he favors unions. This is Carter's game, and you see what it did for him--'course, Vernon Jordon of the Urban League last week showed Carter a taste of the limitations of such methods; someday there will come showdowns. (Jordon, you'll recall, lashed out at Carter for neglecting the people who put him in office, i.e., the black people.)

Worse, far worse, is Ravenel's lugubrious economic prescription: He's a balanced budget nut, and he's adopted the Republican, now ideopathic, line which says, yes, by damn, yes let's cure those social ills--everyone back to work, manna from heaven! But, only thing is, we have to keep the budget balanced. There's the Catch-22. It's exactly equivalent to saying, go to the store and stay as long as you wish. Just be sure you don't buy anything. And the real prescription remains to benignly keep unemployment high, indefinitely, because it's "obvious" that this is the only way to stop inflation, which, according to types like Ravenel, is purely due to "gov'mint spending."

This is the most appalling part: Ravenel is supposedly an investment banker. He's presumably privy to economic advice. Surely he can read the voluminous and competent literature put out by the New York and San Francisco and St. Louis Fed? Surely he is familiar with the ways in which financial markets operate? Surely he knows the dreaded "crowding-out" bugaboo never materialized? Surely he understands that the public debt is what we owe ourselves, and what we hold in asset form? Surely he knows enough to disavow the myth that such debt is a "burden" on our children in some unspecified way? Surely, he can reason that the economy might best be oriented toward the common weal, and not merely to the satisfaction of large corporations which desire longterm debt financing? Surely he's heard of a full-employment balanced budget?

Perhaps if I wasn't an economist, I could appreciate Ravenel's "progressiveness" more. But it's mere chimera and gloss. (I gather that the only officially "radical" thing Ravenel ever did was to fail to endorse Bryan Dorn to run in his place two years ago.)

Funding good government

"Our politicians are the best money can buy--SCE&G." So one popular bumper sticker reads. Politically naive, you say? Perhaps. As one Piedmont state senator put it to us recently, campaign contributions from utilities and other regulated industries to members of the General Assembly cannot be described as "bribes" or money given to "buy" a politician's vote. The sums are decidedly modest; in the case of SCE&G, they range from $25 to $300. But, to paraphrase the senator, "it's not the amount but the thought that counts." If your car breaks down on a deserted road, and you need a lift, you're not likely to forget the fellow who helped you out in your time of need, are you? At best, you're willing to listen; at worst, you're "favorably disposed."

During the 1976 primary and general elections, SCE&G distributed $7,400 in campaign contributions to 49 candidates for state and local offices. The contributions, which ranged from a low of $25 to a high of $300, were distributed through an SCE&G "employees' fund" known as the Good Government Fund. (Actually, the "SCE&G Employees Tax Eligible State and Local Good Government Funds.")

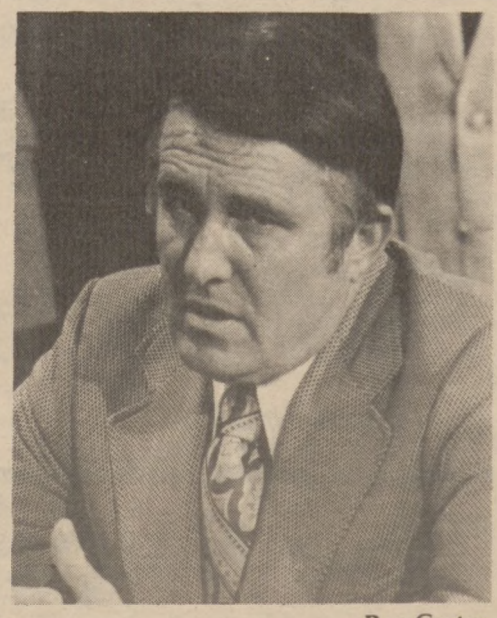
Although SCE&G spokesman Rudy Coward has been quoted in the press as saying the fund was set up by employees, and management had no part in its conception or implementation, SCE&G chairman Arthur M. Williams admitted during recent testimony before the state Public Service Commission that the fund was actually his idea and that he set it up.

Management involvement did not end there. Contributions to the fund are made through a payroll deduction system, and records of the state election commission show that nearly a third of the monies in the fund came from company officers and supervisors, including the company's three top executives.

And while the fund is alleged to be an independent, voluntary employee project, all requests for information about the fund are funneled through the corporate communications department of SCE&G. Elmer F. Frick, Jr., the fund's treasurer, is also an internal auditor for the company.

A top recipient of the fund's largesse was recently highlighted during a spat at the SCE&G rate hike hearings before the Public Service Commission. Consumer spokesman Sen. Tom Turnipseed, D-Lexington, charged that newly-appointed Commission member F. Julian LeaMond had received $300 from SCE&G during his last race for the house of representatives in 1976. LeaMond, who until his recent appointment served as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, responded: "Now you're telling a lie, boy...I got that money from their employees, not SCE&G."

LeaMond did indeed get $300 from the Good Government Fund. He also received a $200 contribution from the S.C. Electric Co-op Political Action Committee. The two contributions from utility interests were the only outside money LeaMond received during his campaign (with the exception of $700 from general state Democratic Party funds).



Rex Carter

House Speaker Rex L. Carter also received a $300 contribution from the SCE&G fund in 1976. The other top recipient was Republican state senator Gilbert McMillan of Aiken, who got $300.

The fund also distributed about $1000 to candidates who ran what might be described as progressive or reform-oriented campaigns. They include: Rep. Nancy Stevenson, D-Charleston ($100); Sen. Dewey Wise, D-Charleston ($150), Rep. Jean Toal, D-Richland ($100); Sen. Isadore Lourie, D-Richland ($200); Rep. McKinley Washington, D-Charleston ($100); Sen. Nikki Setzler, D-Lexington ($250); and Sen. W.E. "Bill" Knotts, D-Barnwell ($200).

The state Democratic party received a general donation of $400 from the fund, the state Republican party $275.

Other legislators who received $100 or more from the fund include: Rep. John D. Bradley, R-Charleston ($100); Rep. D.N. Holt, Jr., D-Charleston ($100); Rep. Robert A. Kohn, R-Charleston ($100); Rep. Paul Gelegotis, D-Charleston ($100); Rep. Norma Russell, R-Lexington ($150); Rep. Robert Burnside, D-Richland ($150); Rep. Harold Taylor, D-Richland ($100); Rep. Ray Ham, R-Lexington ($100); Sen. Thomas Hartnett, R-Charleston ($100); Sen. Hyman Rubin, D-Richland ($150); Rep. Wilson Tison, D-Hampton ($200), and Sen. John Martin, D-Fairfield ($200).

With the exception of House Speaker Rex Carter, virtually all the recipients hold office in SCE&G service areas.

SCE&G communications director Rudy Coward has said a potential candidate could be suggested by any employee making a contribution to the fund, but the final decision was left up to a board of directors which consists primarily of management personnel, and is chaired by Brad McKay, the company's manager of industrial development.

Coward admitted the candidates were selected on a basis of "who could be of benefit to the company and us as employees," but denied the fund was any attempt to buy influence.

"It's just not like that at all."

Clever Bill Workman

The State editorial staff's numero uno right-wing fanatic was back at it this week with what he must consider one of his most clever rationalizations for public policy with which he is aligned.

In W.D. "Bill" Workman, Jr.'s editorial column for Monday (July 25th) favoring the recent U.S. Supreme Court's decision to leave it up to individual states to decide their own public policy on whether to fund non-therapeutic abortions, "Bill" came up with a new twist that no one else (at least no one else in his right mind) would dream of.

What "Bill" contends is that most abortions are sought by unmarried women (oh, no--say it's not so) who are guilty of either "adultery" or "fornication", both crimes under South Carolina law. Although "Bill" admits that "it is rare indeed" when indictments or convictions are obtained for such crimes against the state, he charges that "unmarried pregnant women who seek abortions are testifying in effect that they have participated in violating state law. If they gain abortions at state expense," he continues, then "they produce an anomalous situation in which the state subsidizes illegal conduct."

Now how long do you figure he had to sit with one long index finger scratching on the front portion of his head to come up with this brainstorm? How many cups of finest Colombian coffee, strongly brewed, must he have had injected directly into his temporal lobe in order to come up with so ingeneous a proposition? Why, we were so taken with his idea that we too sat down and tried to think of all the possible violations that could conceivably be committed by otherwise innocent, unknowing contributors to an abortion.

To begin with, wouldn't all doctors performing abortions be guilty of destroying evidence related to a crime? And what about conspiracy after the fact or covering up? Wouldn't the nurses and other aides who contributed to an abortion also be guilty of conspiracy? And what about hospital administrators, aren't they in essence harboring fugitives when abortions are performed in their hospitals?

Of course, everyone connected to the abortion would be guilty of obstruction of justice in some way of other; and there's always "aiding and abetting." The possibilities are endless, obviously. Why in paying for even one abortion, the state is subsidizing illegal acts too numerous to mention. This could be the biggest thing since "Tea Pot Dome" or "Watergate." And we have clever "Bill" Workman, Jr. to thank for it.

Thanks, "Bill".

Advise and consent

It seems Public Service Commission attorney Robert Bochman was put in the embarrassing position, last week, of having to change horses in midstream while wearing two different hats.

The dilemma arose over the recent controversy surrounding state Senator Tom Turnipseed's request for subpoenas of state Senators Marion Gressette and Rembert Dennis. Turnipseed wanted the veteran lawmakers to testify under oath at the SCE&G rate hike hearings as to what services they performed for SCE&G in return for fees paid to them by the company. The PSC refused to issue the subpoenas.

Bochman, as PSC counsel, at that time advised the commission there were absolutely no grounds for a refusal to issue the subpoenas. Bochman said the issuance was a "ministerial" obligation. But the commission held to its split vote decision and did not call the two to testify.

Turnipseed promptly filed for a writ of mandamus, or order to comply, from the circuit court and the case was set before circuit judge Ernest A. Finney.

This time Bochman had to switch horses and argue against the subpoenas which he originally argued for. He told the judge, "I think my legal advice (then) was incorrect." But if indeed incorrect, it was an inco. view shared by the state Attorn. General's office.

General's office. Assistant Attorney General Jim Johnson, in backing Turnipseed's request, said the PSC had a ministerial obligation to issue the subpoenas.

Judge Finney agreed, saying the subpoenas should have been issued by the commission as an administrative procedure. Bochman's dilemma might have been laughable if it were not for the fact that it illustrates some serious ills in the current system.

Hiers reopens with "Accommodations"

The Hiers Dinner Theatre, located on the ground floor of the Ma Bell building on Hampton Street, opened its first show under new management this weekend and will run it every Friday and Saturday night through August 13. Veteran actor/director Adrian Elder has succeeded not only in assembling a professional and intelligent cast for "Accommodations," a three-act comedy written especially for dinner theatre, but in making much needed changes in the house as well.

The place has been repainted and fresh plants have been hung in order to make the Hiers Cafeteria seem less like a cafeteria. The effort is not altogether unsuccessful. Plaudits for the buffet which features Cornish Hen, Swedish meatballs, roast beef and fresh fruit cocktails with strawberries the size of golfballs. The wine list has been expanded to include champagne, appetizer and dessert wines in addition to reds and whites. The predominant label is still Christian Brothers, although German and French bottles are available.

Mr. Elder, known to Columbia audiences for performances at Hiers, Town Theatre and Workshop Theatre, opened the evening with a few pleasant songs, though it is much to his credit that he turned the mike over to the lovely Erika Wheeler, a recent graduate of Columbia College who is working at the theatre as a waitress. Her somewhat nervous "I Want To Be Me" was nonetheless successful and it would be a treat for future audiences if she is given more pre-show time.

Although Mr. Elder has ably directed his talented ensemble, the first act of "Accommodations" is slow and dull, and the fault is quite with the play rather than the actors. The act is essentially expository but the exposition is neither particularly intelligent nor skillful. The relationships and plot are laid out too quickly and too easily, with the result that later events are far too readily anticipated. Though the audience occasionally twittered at a few lines, there was a rather chilly absence of genuine laughter. Not even the enthusiasm and sparkle of Amanda Graham, who plays the role of a kooky actress whose personality changes as often as her costumes, could pick it up. It is not that she dominated the other players (Michael Genevie, Alice Gettle and David Dreiman) or that they were deficient. Her character, however, is the only one at that point with any oomph or activity. The first act is based more on lines than on action and the lines are banal and force stereotyped characters onto very fine actors.

The second act, however, is gloriously worth the $10 admission and more than compensates for the sins of the first. Mr. Dreiman and Ms. Graham succeed completely in their mastery of one of the most difficult feats in acting, the convincing portrayal of drunkenness. And in this act they are not simply drunk; they are a dozen sheets to the wind, blue-blind, fallin' down ruined--two terrible catastrophes of the grape. Their scene begins innocently enough with dinner and two bottles of wine. Gradually, however, their speech begins to thicken and their movements become more unsure. By the middle of the act, they are well into the Scotch and are not sure of anything. Ms. Graham collapses and slides into a heap from time to time and her face is a study of drunken intensity. Mr. Dreiman, who stands an almost skinny six feet plus, simply unfolds, and seems to have great difficulty in keeping his face on his head. This act is genuinely funny, and the audience has the treat of watching two thoroughly professional actors having the time of their lives.

The Hiers Dinner Theatre is fortunate to have the services of Mr. Elder and actors who are obviously accustomed to working with each other. It certainly seems headed for a bright future as its next production indicates. "Jacques Brel Is Alive And Well And Living In Paris" opens, at a special preview performance, on August 18.

Sara Nalley & Jim Patterson in "6 Rms Riv Vu"

"6 Rms Riv Vu": The best of the recent crop

Bell Productions' transition from Hiers Dinner Theatre, where they pioneered in the dinner theatre movement in Columbia, to the Carolina Town House was a successful shift, from the theatre-goer's standpoint, at least. Frank Bell selected a proven script: "6 Rms Riv Vu", a comedy which several years ago played to highly appreciative Town Theatre audiences. The same key people who did the Town Theatre version were reorganized for the Carolina Town House debut. The patron is rewarded with good comedy, masterfully executed for the most part if not totally realistic in the characterizations. It is probably the best of the recent crop of comic studies into promiscuity to have played in Columbia,accomplishes what dinner theatre comedy is all about: producing laughter and entertaining, which are two entirely different and important facets of theatrical comedy. The audience leaves feeling that their outing, while admittedly a flight from seriousness, has been worthwhile.

The plot: A man and woman, each less-than-happily married, are prospective tenants for the same vacant New York apartment. While scouting the premises they accidentally are locked in together. They quickly discover mutual interests and begin to share a mutual attraction, and the remainder of the play considers the predictable but truly funny struggle between traditional mores and natural romantic instincts. In a sentence, the base instincts win a battle but lose the war. That kind of comic conflict with that kind of ending leaves you chuckling but pensive, no matter what your moral bent happens to be.

The man, played by James Patterson, at varying times was aggressive, silly, humorous (laughing at himself as often as at anyone or anything else) and serious, and Patterson effortlessly and smoothly made the attitude transitions. The woman, played by Linda DuRant, usually did not let herself be drawn deeper than half-seriousness. Like Patterson, Ms. DuRant seemed quite comfortable with her role and played it admirably. Most importantly, though, they developed the characters together so that the growing relationship--not just the individuals--came to life onstage. By the third act they had attained a level of genuineness in the two characters not common strong comic roles because it normally isn't essential. As they prove, however, genuineness adds an enriching dimension if it can be created. It is obviously a fringe benefit acquired from having played the script before.

Missy Cromer was a hit as the outlandish woman in 4-A. A play on the stereotyped New York apartment dweller, her performance was wholehearted and detailed, down to the accent and the outrageous costume.

Tim Corder made the most of his few lines as the building superintendent. Though he strained just a bit too hard, he did create a visual impact, however brief.

Mike Collins looked, sounded and above all acted the part of a busy architect husband (spouse of the errant DuRant) convicingly. Though too busy to realize his failure to fulfill all of his wife's needs, he appeared as a loving husband and a likable character, which lent a trace of pathos to the situation.

Sara Nalley performed a good supporting role as Patterson's liberation-minded wife, though her impersonation was a bit mild for a women's lib stereotype. Her really creditable work was as director, and solid work it was.

Two negative notes of minor import: On occasion, when more th[an] characters were onstage, [the] undercurrent of sincerity betw[een] characters seemed to be severed briefly, they were not so much real characters behaving together in an actual, spontaneous situation as actors waiting their turns; a bit more tightness, which should come in ensuing weekends, will go a long way in eliminating that distraction.

Also, Missy Cromer was the only performer to attempt a New York accent; the others apparently felt it would be more practical to be themselves. Without taking a side, we'll note simply that it probably would be less disconcerting to the audience if the speech styles were all or nothing. The Brooklyn accent, obviously, was a vital part of Ms. Cromer's approach to her role; thus any solution to the problem might turn out to be more disconcerting in the long run than the problem itself. So at this point they'll have to let it slide. It's nothing damning.

A polite protest...

I ain't no conservative stick-in-the-mud, but I must enter a polite protest at this juncture. The blossoming medium of dinner theatre in Columbia has generally been a remarkable success, in my view, but things seem to be going a little awry in regard to the selection of subject matter.

Sexual promiscuity is a valid topic, particularly for comedy, and playwrights have treated it to appeal to both the dim-light and stain-glassed-window sets, and they have some marvelous scripts to show for it. But in the last four dinner theatre plays I've seen--or is it five?--it's been covered from so many angles that I just ain't interested in seeing another one at the present time. Whatever happened to crime and violence, or westerns, or war, or soap operas? Science fiction? Hell, anything....

If that's all there is to Our Free Society, I'll take my fiddle and my jug, thank you, and quietly but gratefully slip off into the hills.--Dan Harmon abstention, equity, comity and federalism (doctrines requiring that a federal court not hear a case), the court has decreased not only the number of cases it will hear, but the caseloads of all other federal courts as well.

"a callous disregard"

Supreme Court in retreat

The Court has severely cut back on the availability of class action cases. Its most recent decision placed the burden of notifying each and every class member upon the Plaintiff, thus making the costs of a class action prohibitive to most individuals.

Of course, the easiest way to cut back on the docket is to narrow the definition and scope of constitutionally protected rights. At this the Court has become ingenious. In fact, the Court has exhibited an almost callous and cavalier disregard for human rights and individual liberties.

The Court has demonstrated not only a penchant for disregarding previous decisions of the Court, but is even more invidious when it has chosen to totally ignore precedent cases as though they never existed. At times, the majority of the Court has had to suffer lapses of realism in order to reach their conclusions.

What follows is an account of some of the more significant rulings handed down by the court in this last term:

Abortion.

Perhaps the most fiery debate in society today was reignited by the Supreme Court when it decided to leave to Congress and state legislatures the duty of deciding whether or not indigent women should be allowed to have elective abortions paid by federal-state medicaid monies.

In 1973, the Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade decided on constitutional grounds that the government must not interfere with the right of any woman to have an abortion in the first three months of her pregnancy if she so chooses. This term, the Court held, in effect, that the only women who can be sure of obtaining a medically safe abortion are those who can afford to pay for it.

The Court in Beal v. Doe and Maher v. Roe ruled six to three that Title XIX of the Social Security Act, which established a joint federal-state medicaid program, does not require participating states to fund nontherapeutic abortions.

The Court, in callous disregard of the facts, brushed aside the equal protection claims of poor women:

"Although serious statutory questions might be presented if a state medicaid plan excluded necessary medical treatment from its coverage," the court said, "it is hardly inconsistent with the objectives of the act for a state to refuse to fund unnecessary—though perhaps desirable—medical services."

In dealing directly with the constitutional question of whether the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment forbade the exclusion of nontherapeutic abortions from a state welfare program that generally subsidized the medical expenses incident to pregnancy and childbirth, the Court rejected any equal protection arguments. The

> "...The Court, in callous disregard of the facts, brushed aside the equal protection claims of poor women..."

Justices held that the state regulation limiting medicaid benefits for first trimester abortions to those that are "medically necessary" did not unconstitutionally impinge upon a woman's fundamental right to be free from unduly burdensome state interference with her freedom to decide whether to terminate her pregnancy. The Court said that the regulation denying financial aid for abortions was rationally related to the state's legitimate interest in encouraging childbirth.

Medicaid payments accounted for nearly 300,000 of the one million abortions performed in this country last year. The dissenters, Justices Brennan, Marshall and Blackman, were not able to so easily dismiss the rights of women unable to pay for their abortions. Justice Marshall assailed the retreat from Roe.

"The enactments challenged here brutally coerce poor women to bear children whom society will scorn for every day of their lives. Many thousands of unwanted minority and mixed race children now spend blighted lives in foster homes, orphanages and 'reform' schools...And I am appalled at the ethical bankruptcy of those who preach a 'right to life' that means, under present social policies, a bare existence in utter misery for so many poor women and their children."

Justice Blackmun, who wrote the majority opinion in Roe v. Wade, said the Court was doing indirectly that which the previous decision said they could not do:

"For the individual woman concerned," he said, "indigent and financially helpless...the result is punitive and tragic. Implicit in the court's holdings is the condescension that she may go elsewhere for her abortion. I find that disingenuous and alarming, almost reminiscent of 'let them eat cake'...There is another world 'out there', the existence of which the court, I suspect, either chooses to ignore or fears to recognize, and so the cancer of poverty will continue to grow."

Students and Teachers

In the area of student rights the Court took another giant step in narrowing the scope of constitutional protections. In Ingraham v. Wright, the Court held that the cruel and unusual punishment clause of the Eighth Amendment did not apply to disciplinary corporal punishment in public schools and that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment did not require notice and a hearing prior to the imposition of corporal punishment. The 5-4 decision, written by Justice Powell, a former attorney for the Richmond, Virginia School Board, acknowledged that the instances of punishment could be characterized as severe:

"Because he was slow to respond to his teachers' instructions," Powell said, "Ingraham was subjected to more than 20 licks with a paddle while being held over a table in the principal's office. The paddling was so severe that he suffered a hematoma requiring medical attention and keeping him out of school 11 days. Andrews was paddled several times for minor infractions. On two occasions he was struck on his arms, once depriving him of the full use of his arm for a week."

Despite the evidence, the Court ruled that the constitutional protections of the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments were not available to students and their only remedy was in the State Courts under the common law. In the Court's words: "The school child has little need for the protection of the Eighth Amendment...As long as the schools are open to public scrutiny, there is no reason to believe that the common law constraints will not effectively remedy and deter excesses such as those alleged in this case."

The Court also held that requiring notice and hearing prior to infliction of punishment was unnecessary and would unduly intrude into an area of responsibility properly left to public school authorities.

The dissenting justices in the paddling decision were appalled at the majority's opinion, particularly Justice White, who called the ruling "plainly wrong" in light of the previous history of the Eighth Amendment. "Where corporal punishment becomes so severe," he said, "as to be unacceptable in civilized society, I see no reason that it should become only more acceptable just because it is inflicted on children in public schools."

"...Despite the evidence (of severe punishment), the Court ruled that the constitutional protections of the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments were not available to students..."

An equally divided Court in Vorchheimer v. Philadelphia School District affirmed without opinion a Court of Appeals decision upholding the maintenance by the Philadelphia Public School District of two single-sex high schools. The Court of Appeals had found that the enrollment in the single sex schools was voluntary and educational opportunities offered were essentially equal.

The Supreme Court also made it more difficult for teachers to retain their jobs in cases where they alleged that their employment was terminated in violation of their constitutionally protected rights. In the case of an untenured Ohio school teacher who had not been rehired substantially because of conduct protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments, the court remanded (sent the case back) the case to the lower Federal Court advising them to determine whether the School Board would have made "the same decision as to the respondent's reemployment in the absence of the protected conduct."

The teacher had been employed since 1966 and in 1969 was elected president of the local teachers' association. Over a period of 5 years, he had been involved in (a) an argument with another teacher, (b) an argument with a school cafeteria employee, (c) an incident wherein he had sworn at several students in a discipline situation, and (d) a cafeteria incident in which he had made an obscene gesture to female students when they refused to follow instructions. Also in 1971 he called a radio station and criticized a new teacher dress and appearance code, for which he later apologized.

The School Board gave the telephone call and the obscene gestures as reasons for not rehiring him. The District Court found the telephone call to the radio station (protected First Amendment activity) had played a "substantial part" in the Board's decision not to rehire. The Supreme Court, it appears, is ready to apply a "totality of circumstances" test and allow school boards to utilize cumulative criteria in its decisions not to rehire outspoken teachers.

In other actions, the court found no violation of the First Amendment's Establishment Clause (which defines the constitutional wall separating church and state) in Ohio's statute authorizing the State to provide textbooks, standardized tests and other services to non-public schools. The court determined that the provision of state aid in these areas would not create an impermissible risk of fostering ideological views or of advancing religion. The court did, however, strike down as impermissible direct aid to sectarian education; i.e., two sections of the same Ohio law which had attempted to provide instructional material and equipment and funding for field trips.

Capital Punishment.

The Court issued two decisions regarding capital punishment. In the first case, Roberts v. Louisiana, the Court struck down the mandatory death sentence imposed upon Roberts for the murder of a peace officer. The Court emphasized that "the fundamental respect for humanity underlying the Eighth Amendment...requires consideration of the character and record of the individual offender and the circumstances of a particular offense as a constitutionally indispensible part of the process of inflicting the penalty of death." The Court determined that "it is essential that the capital sentencing decision allow for consideration of whatever mitigating circumstances may be relevant to either the particular offender or the particular offense."

On the final day of this term, the Court in Coker v. Georgia, struck down the death penalty for the crime of rape of an adult. The Court concluded that the sentence of death for rape was grossly disproportionate and excessive punishment and therefore forbidden by the Eighth Amendment as cruel and unusual. The decision is a victory for civil rights advocates and women. Historically the death penalty for rape has been imposed upon blacks more often than on whites. This decision may actually help in prosecuting rapists since many juries in the past have been reluctant to impose the death penalty and refused despite clear cut evidence to convict under those strictures.

Desegregation.

The Supreme Court has, over the years, established five basic principles in the area of school desegregation: (1) School segregation is unconstitutional if it results from the intentional actions of state or local government, but it is not unconstitutional if not the result of official policy. (Examples of "offical policy" include the formerly legal dual school systems in the South, zoning to keep out blacks, construction of schools in locations that further segregation and other similar devices employed to that end); (2) busing is an acceptable and often necessary remedy for unconstitutional segregation, although the schools need not reflect precise numbers of whites and blacks in each school. (3) desegregation, though not normally required across jurisdictional lines (between cities and suburbs), may be ordered in certain cases where boundaries were redrawn to perpetuate desegregation; (4) entire school districts must be desegregated even if proof of intentional segregation occurred only in one part of the district; and (5) once a school district is desegregated, officials need not take any further action even when the schools become resegregated because of changes in housing patterns.

This term, the Supreme Court issued several new decisions in the area of desegregation. In one case, involving the Detroit school district, the court upheld a lower court's interdistrict plan to correct past de jure (legal) segregation. The lower court had fashioned a program of compensatory and remedial education programs for children who had been the victims of past acts of segregation in which the court required state officials to bear part of the costs. The Supreme Court found that the lower court was justified and authorized to provide such relief.

In a second decision, the Supreme Court struck down a lower court's system-wide remedy for segregation in the Dayton, Ohio schools. The District Court found racial discrimination on the basis of "cumulative violations" of the Equal Protection Clause, including substantial racial imbalance in enrollment patterns throughout the system, use of optional attendance zones which allowed white students to avoid attendance at predominantly black schools and recision of 1972 resolutions passed by a previous school board which acknowledged responsibility for creation of segregative racial patterns.

"...The decision (striking down the death sentence for rape) is a victory for civil rights advocates and women..."

The Supreme Court held that there was no evidence of intent to segregate upon the part of the Board and it was not demonstrated that a system-wide remedy was necessary to "eliminate all vestiges of the state-imposed school segregation." The Court remanded the case to the District Court to determine if the school board intended to and did, in fact, discriminate. The court said that "only if there has been a system-wide impact may there be a system-wide remedy." Thus, it appears that no more desegregation is required under the Constitution than that necessary to redress the segregation that resulted from intentional policies.

Perhaps more important was the vote last week in Congress to prohibit the government from withholding federal aid from school districts that refuse to merge black and white schools to accomplish desegregation. The vote would not stop court-ordered busing but would do little to encourage recalcitrant school districts to act voluntarily.

In next week's conclusion, Buhl discusses decisions in the areas of freedom of expression, employment discrimination, housing discrimination and criminal laws.

Bochman is the first PSC counsel to serve directly under the PSC, and last week's shenanigans illustrate just how vulnerable to pressure by the commission that position can be. Bochman found himself recanting a position which was supported by the petitioners, the judge, and the Attorney General's office. It was a position opposed only by the PSC itself--Bochman's boss.

Legal counsel should be exactly that--counsel based on the existing laws. But under the current set-up it seems that counsel will be increasingly based on the whims and wishes of the commission.

Curiously enough, it was Gressette himself who introduced an amendment in the appropriations bill which transferred funding for counsel from the Attorney General's office to the PSC. Dennis was also reputed to have had a hand in the undermining of counsel's independence.

One objection voiced by the PSC to the subpoenas was that Gressette and Dennis had been singled out by Turnipseed, an accusation he readily admits.

"These two men personally strangled every piece of utility reform legislation introduced," Turnipseed said. Their shuffling of control of counsel is a good indication of where their sympathies lie. Dennis himself nominated the pair's staunchest defender on the commission, Julian "Goat" LeaMond.

Their testimony should prove interesting, and we have Judge Ernest Finney to thank for giving us a chance to hear it.

So, Ravenel's old wine in a new bottle. Just another politico. Still, I hope he wins. At his worst, he has to be better than anybody else running in the state. And heaven knows, Sen. Strom has been one of the least effective senators in Washington for the last 30 or more years. His fame rests on a few dumb headstands in the Senate cloakroom, and marriage to a young girl with a taste for "older guys".

Yes, even while Ravenel speaks certified double-talk and panders to the worst instincts of the Thurmond constituency, at least he is under the age of 80; has a college education; can count to ten; and doesn't always pronounce one-syllable words in two syllables. That's something, I suppose.
